Your Values--the Keys to Success

"...the key to success is knowing (and experiencing) what's truly valuable to you."

How do you know when you're successful?

Only when you attain a certain status or goal? Since these events can take years (or decades) you could go a long, long time without feeling successful. Why not enjoy the contentment of feeling successful every day of your life? How? By understanding that achieving our values is what makes you truly successful.

If we value time with friends or good books, family and God; if we value personal discipline, growth and helping others; if we value the outdoors, sunsets and rainbows, art and music; then we are successful each and every time we experience one of our values!

When we have our values clearly defined (why not list them in your calendar?), each week should add up to many successes (in achieving your values).

Bottom line - the key to success is knowing (and experiencing) what's truly valuable to you. So you don't have to make (or look like) a million bucks, as long as you regularly get to do what you love-that's true success.
